MAKING MUSEUMS INTERESTING

In the past museums had a reputation for of being dull, dusty places displaying old object in glass cases. Visiting them wasn't a lot of fun for teenagers! These days, things have changed. Our young reporter, Martin Howard, went to Europe and the US to find some more interesting places to go!

My first stop was Britain and the Science Museum in London. One of the ways in which museums have improved recent years through technology and interactive learning: doing fun activities and learning at the same time. The Science Museum has done a fantastic of this. Some of the highlights were the MotionRide Simulator, which is a rollercoaster type ride, a studio where you can take part in an imaginary radio show and an Imax cinema where you can see 3D movies.

Another way to make museums more appealing for teenagers is to focus on subjects that are really interesting! The Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland, USA is a great place to visit. The new building is fantastic pyramid shape made of glass and porcelain and the museum itself explores the past, present and future of music. You can listen to music, watch music videos, or look at the massive collection of items from the musicians around the world including handwritten lyrics, musical instruments and clothes belong to artists like Elvis Presley and Madonna.

I visited several food museums and my favorite was the Chocolate Museum in Barcelona, in Spain. the museum is in a beautiful fourteenth- century building and has all kind of information about the history of chocolate. There are also models made out of chocolate including one of the footballer Ronaldinho and other of famous buildings in Barcelona. The chocolate of these models made at the museum, and there's a cafe and a shop selling delicious chocolate sweets!

There are just three of many fantastic museums I visited, but of course travelling is expensive and it isn't always possible. Instead, look on the Internet and find the best museums near you, or browse through the hundreds of online museums.
